Regularized graph matching: application in speech identification and recognition. The graph matching framework has been introduced to solve problems like speech identification, speech recognition, retrieval, and global optimization. In this paper, a new graph matching problem based on regularized functions is introduced. A new regularized graph matching algorithm is developed based on gradient descent. Experiments on image and speech problems show the efficiency and effectiveness of the proposed algorithm. Since no special feature extraction algorithms are employed in the proposed algorithm, it has a promising application in real-world tasks like speech identification and retrieval.
